Armless Girl

Gets Hands But

Doesn't Like Them

Lovejoy, Ga., Dec. 21 —/P)—blue-eyed Grace Purcell has "hanus" at last but she doesn't

The four-year-old child, born without hards and arms below the elbow, says the metal de vices that have been strapped to her arm stumps are urgly. But her purents and officials at the Georgia state welfare department, whic provided the appliances, hope Grace will learn to use them.

Mrs. Helen Carr, supervisor of the department's division for crippled children, said the cur-ley-naired child's reaction was not surprising.

"She has never had arms or hands," Mrs. Carr explained, "and she has no idea what they are for."

The applicances were provided after a specialist said it would be impossible to give Grace hands and fingers thrugh plastic surgery. More than $2-000 was contributed to a fund to provide the child with plastic arms and hands. The rund was started by Henry R. Lee, a railroad engineer, after he saw Grace wave to him as his train passed the Purcell home. Tow Lar. homes to said Grace.

Lee hopes to send Grace through college with the contributions.

Washington, Dec. 21 -(A)- The State department today denounced the use of force in effection political changes in Latin America as 'deplorable' and inconsistent with the ideals of the American republics.

It said in a statement that the use of arms if "increasingly a danger to all the countries of this hemisphere."

The department issued its annuancement of policy as it disclosed that the United States is consulting with a number of the Latin American countries on what might properly be done to stabilize the hemisphere politically.

This move came in the wake of a series of revolts and unsuccessful uprisings in the past few months during which three Latin American governments have been overthrown and eight others threatened. The department said the United States assured the Latin American governments of its concern.

It said the United States wishes to taske "every legitimate and use ful effort to encourage Democratic and conscitutional procedures" in the view of the government of the United States." the department's statement declared. "The liss of force as an instrument of bolitical change is not only deplorable, but is usually inconsistent with the acknowledged ideals of the American republies and increasingly a donicer to all the countries of this hemisohere.

"If the use of force continues, it camot fail to become a sufficiently serious issue to emage the attention of the American republics as a whole."
